From the President's Desk

Idon’t know about you but I am spending way more time than I like compulsively checking the news. Yesterday I made repeated visits to The Times website, even though I had already read the paper (you know, the real one that you hold in your hands) in the morning – and I won’t mention the online Guardian or that I’ve now subscribed to LeMonde. In the evening I devour fairly repetitive news broadcasts as if they were creamy petit fours on a tray placed perilously close to my hands. This news supersaturation can’t be any better for my health than those wonderful pastries, maybe even worse. I know many of you are going to roll your eyes at this, but participating in events like those offered by EPIC, where you can think about other things and be in the company of generally like-minded peers, really helps. Last week we didn’t have our regular EPIC yoga class because of scheduling conflicts and I missed the hour of twisting, turning, deep breathing and clearing my head, with wonderful geneticiast-yoga instructor Ginny Papaioannou.

Times like this call for good fellowship – and for some serious thinking about things other than the dismal state of world affairs and of the poor physical planet itself. This Thursday, at our last spring semester First Thursday Graduate Student Talk, we will have the opportunity to think about how music (not newscaster palaver) interacts with our bodies. On May 4, we will visit one of the wonders of the modern intellectual world: the RECAP book repository in Princeton, on a trip that Fran Pritchett is organizing (see below), and May 9 is our annual reception. Please think about joining us.

Have a good day!

Visit RECAP in Princeton with EPIC May 4

Join EPIC’s Private Tour of RECAP

We are planning an EPIC trip (in both senses of the word) to RECAP, the Columbia-Princeton-New York Public Library consortium for offsite book storage and retrieval on Princeton’s Forrestal campus. This is where most of Columbia’s books are stored.

RECAP is so innovative and successful that librarians from around the world come to see its operations at close hand. EPIC has arranged a special tour of the facilities, which are normally closed to the public. We’re planning an all-day affair, started with a chartered bus from the Morningside campus. A senior RECAP administrator will lead us on a tour, then it’s onto lunch at a Princeton nice restaurant. In order to finalize plans, we need to know as soon as possible if you are would like to join us for this unusual and interesting day. Space is restaurant and a return by bus to campus.

We haven’t quite figured out all the bus costs. It will probably be $25, plus lunch at a mid-range

"The Effect of Music-Movement Interactions on the Perception of Ballet: The Case of the Rose Adagio"

Maeve Sterbenz, a Ph.D. student in Music Theory at Columbia University, her current research investigates the variegated and complex ways in which music and movement can interact in works that involve both media, such as in ballets, music videos, and films. Her dissertation, titled "Moving with Music: Approaches to the Analysis of Movement-Music Interactions," consists of a set of close readings of pieces in diverse styles and genres. In addition to her academic work in music theory, she has considered movement-music interactions from the perspective of a composer for dance.

This study she will discuss with us investigates the interaction between dance and music in the Rose Adagio from Tchaikovsky’s The Sleeping Beauty. Taking an intersubjective approach, Sterbenz’s analysis highlights instances in which watching co-occurring movement affects musical perceptions, or vice versa. Kinesthetic empathy, an embodied sensation elicited by observing others’ movement, plays a significant role in these perceptions. Sterbenz also considers conscious interventions on kinesthetic empathy, where a deliberate change in perspective affects the way we hear and see the work. While both character and performer inhabit a single onstage body, one can access different empathetic embodied responses depending on whether the perceiver aligns with one or the other, and this difference in alignment yields divergent music analytical observations.

Housing Mobility Program:
Application Deadline for Final Round is April 6

The application deadline for the final round of the pilot Housing Mobility Program (HMP) is coming up on Thursday, April 6, 2017. This program offers tenants in Columbia housing financial support for moving out of Columbia housing or to a smaller apartment that may better fit their needs.

The program description, available here, outlines the Program’s parameters, describes eligibility requirements, and includes copies of the application. It also includes characteristics of typical “downsized” apartments and information about professional organizers who help people move to a new residence.

After the conclusion of the pilot, The Office of the Provost will conduct an evaluation and decide whether the program will be continued. If you have questions or wish to learn more, please reach out to Carrie Marlin, Assistant Provost for Administration and Planning, at 212-854-0218 or cm3509@columbia.edu.
Virginia Papaioannou, Professor of Genetics and Development and a registered yoga instructor, is offering yoga training to EPIC members in Faculty House (see signs in lobby for exact room location). The first class will be complimentary. After the first class, the fee will be $40 for four classes, one per week, through May 26, 2017. Please click here for more information about the classes, what to wear, and what to bring. Spring sessions: 3/17, 3/24, 4/7 and 4/21; and 5/5, 5/12, 5/19, and 5/26. Please note that the April 7 session will take place at 6:00 p.m. in Faculty House.
